Course Description

This course focuses on Latin American politics after the democratization of the region in the 1980s. We will not devote each week to one specific country. Instead, we will study topics and issues that are common to countries in the region. Specifically, we will explore the effects of political institutions on representation, governability, parties, and elections. We will also learn about the changes in political orientation and policies that occurred in the period. Lastly, we will also examine social and political issues, such as violence and corruption. After taking this class, students should be able to answer questions like “Why there are more female legislators in some Latin American countries than in others?”, “Does the colonial legacy affect Latin America today?”, “What led voters in Latin America to elect left-wing presidents in the early 2000s?”

This course is an introduction to different topics in Latin American politics. Hence, it does not require any background.

Course Requirements

Participation: Students are encouraged to participate actively. Participation will be judged based on your engagement in discussions and questions asked/answered. Participation will be worth 10% of your total grade.

Quizzes: Almost every week, we will do a short quiz at the beginning of class. Questions included in the quizzes will be T/F and multiple-choice. Quizzes will cover the reading of the day. Your three worst scores will be discarded. The remaining quiz scores will be worth 15% of your total grade.

Response Papers: Each student is expected to submit two response papers during the semester. These papers must contain a critical summary of three of the articles assigned in a specific week. Apart from the critical summary, students should pay particular attention to the following questions when writing their essays:

- Is the argument believable?
- What evidence presented has convinced you? Or, what evidence would convince you?
- Do the readings raise questions that are not addressed?

Each response paper will be worth 25% of your total grade (50% in total). Your topics will be randomly assigned to you on the second day of class. Response papers are due at the beginning of class on Thursdays.

Exams: We will have two closed-note, closed-readings exams. Exams will contain T/F, multiple-choice, short, and long essay questions. The first exam will be after we finish week seven, and the second will be at the end of the semester. The first exam will cover the content from weeks 1 to 7, and the second exam will cover the remaining weeks. Each exam will be worth 12.5% of your final grade (25% in total).

Course Policies

Attendance: I will not take attendance for this class. However, I want to emphasize that your attendance will affect your final grade, given that 25% of your grade is composed of participation and quizzes.

Late Assignments: Late assignments will not be accepted. If you have any conflict related to your due dates for your response papers, please let me know at the beginning of the semester.

Use of Technology: The use of cell phones and tablets is not allowed. Students can use their laptops only to take notes or when asked to do so by the instructor. Any use of technology that does not follow this policy will count against your participation grade.

Students with a disability: Students with disabilities needing academic accommodation must submit a letter from the office of Disability Resources indicating the need for accommodation and its type. Students must submit this letter during the first three weeks of class.

Religious observances: Students who anticipate that a religious observance will conflict with their participation should contact me in the first two weeks of class to arrange an accommodation.

Grading

Letter grades will be assigned using the following scale (in %):

A : ≥ 94	B+: ≥ 87	C+: ≥ 77	D+: ≥ 67	F: ≤ 60
A-: ≥ 90	B: ≥ 83	C: ≥ 73	D: ≥ 63
	B-: ≥ 80	C-: ≥ 70	D-: ≥ 60

Course Readings

Students are expected to do the readings before the lecture. Readings will be available via Canvas. Readings were chosen based on theoretical motivation as much as current events.
